A Double Suicide.

The suicide of Mrs. Edward L. Caron and Victor Cyrier at the Virginia Hotel, at Chicago, has aroused a great deal of interest. The Virginia is probably the most exclusive of all the family hotels in Chicago, and Cyrier chose it, it is suspected, because he and Mrs. Caron would be safe from the searchers there.
Caron was married five years ago to Hedwig Boivert, of Bourbonnais, near Kankakee. Both belonged to good French Canadian families. Little did the people of Bourbonnais think that Victor Cyrier, the black eyed youth of twenty-one, who was at the wedding, would wreck the life of Edward Caron and die with the bride who was led to the altar on that day.

Caron brought his wife to Chicago and started house-keeping above his drug store, at No. 109 Blue Island avenue. Dr. Charles E. Cyrier, another Frenchman from Bourbonnais, lived at No. 107 Blue Island avenue, and between the two families there was a warm friendship. Business prospered with Caron and there came a time when he needed an assistant.
Dr. Cyrier recommended his second cousin in Bourbonnais, Victor Cyrier, who was a drug clerk, and about three years ago Victor was installed as clerk. Caron could not afford to pay high wages, and he offered to board Cyrier and let him sleep in the store.
This was satisfactory to the young man, who was a handsome fellow, and he soon became popular in the neighborhood and intimate with his employer's family.

Victor paid such attention to the wife as to arouse the suspicions of his cousin, Dr. Cyrier, who remonstrated with him. The young man swore that his attentions were those of a man of honor.

Caron was furious, and attempted to kick Cyrier out of the house. Mrs. Caron restrained him and begged forgiveness. She knelt at his feet and implored him to pardon her for the sake of their child. The emotional Frenchman burst into tears and forgave. They knew together at the little altar in the bedroom, she praying for strength to withstand temptation, he that he might forgive the man who had wronged him.

Young Cyrier left the Caron house at once and never entered it again, although that did not prevent him from meeting the infatuated wife.
She sent the baby to her husband in the store last Tuesday morning, kissing the child repeatedly before handing her over to the nurse. A few minutes later she fled from her home. The little girl waved her hand to her mother through the window. The look of determination on the woman's face softened, she hesitated, seemed as if about to enter the store, but stopped, turned, and passed out of sight.

She and Victor went to the Virginia, and, being stylishly dressed and well behaved, were received. They registered as Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. La Pointe, from St. Paul. They never left their rooms except for meals.
What arguments they advanced for committing suicide together will never be known. Both knew that they could never be united in marriage. Both were Catholics, and that church does not recognize divorce. Perhaps this made the guilty lovers despair. Morphine was chosen by which they could end their lives.

They made a contract that whoever should find the other dead would use the revolver which was placed on the table near the chair where they both sat. In the early morning Cyrier prepared the drug. Before taking the poison, however, each wrote letters.
Her's was to her husband and babe. It read as follows:
To all--A last farewell to our dear friends. Life is no more a happiness to us. Vie is not to blame. We die here together to-night as true friends. Farewell husband and dear little child. Hope you will remember your mother. A kiss to my little one who has no mother to-night. O, home without a mother. What will she do?
The writing was unsteady, and it is thought she penned the letter, after she had taken the poison. One of Cyrier's letters read thus:
To Friends--I bid you all farewell forever. O, sad it is, but I cannot help it. With my sorrows I cannot bear it. I die happy here to-night, but all times I can say that I have done my duty. Hope you will all forgive me.
Hope to meet you all in a better world. O, dear! forgive me. I am no longer able to write. My strength is failing. O, good night for ever.

Another was a short note, which said: She died at 5:30 this morning. I can't write any more. I can't open my eyes.
What was evidently his last letter was as follows:
We die together on the same chair.
Same both find. Who find us dead take revolver shoot self.
This referred to the agreement that the survivor should use a revolver to hasten death. Cyrier wrote more, but he forgot to dip his pen in the ink occasionaly. Some of the words were blurred and some were straggling marks. A few words deciphered were,
"hope, forgiveness," "I am crazy," "ref deliv lets," "dear faithful and honest." There was no connection between these expressions, and it was evident that the writer's strength was failing him. Still he remembered the contract. Staggering toward the table he turned the muzzle toward his breast and fired.

STRANGE CASE.

"Our daughter was so terribly afflicted with nervousness that she lost the use of her right arm and had to give up all her studies. We feared St. Vitus dance, and but for Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine she would have had that affliction. Physicians did her no good. Three bottles of Nervine entirely restored the victim, and she gained 30 pounds in weight, and her appetite and sleep well." —Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y. Nervine is sold by all
